

SPECIAL ISSUE: A COLLECTION OF ORAL HISTORIES
FROM PROMINENT GAMING INDUSTRY FIGURES

EDITOR'S NOTE

Adam Ellis
Editor-in-Chief

The UNLV Gaming Law Journal is proud to publish Volume 7: Issue 1, which is dedicated to presenting the oral histories of some of the most interesting individuals in the gaming industry. UNLV Gaming Law Journal staff conducted recorded interviews with each of these individuals, which were then transcribed and edited to improve clarity and readability. Despite our edits, we took special care to preserve the original message, context, and character of the spoken word.

These oral histories present a true representation of the remembered past in an attempt to show you how the narrator's memory of facts, experiences, and circumstances have shaped their perception of the world around them. The UNLV Gaming Law Journal staff has authenticated major dates, events, and factual references where possible and included footnotes to provide context or further information. It is important to note, however, that these are the personal histories of each narrator, told as they remember them. As such, the UNLV Gaming Law Journal cannot guarantee that each oral history is free from the fallacy of human memory. The unedited transcripts and recordings are in the possession of the UNLV Gaming Law Journal and are available for review upon request.

I would like to thank several people who made this special issue possible. Thank you to Jack Binion, Vic Salerno, and Thomas Auriemma for graciously agreeing to share their personal stories with us. Thank you to oral historian Claytee White, Director of the Oral History Research Center at UNLV, for donating her time and effort to teaching UNLV Gaming Law Journal staff about the oral history process and how to conduct an oral history interview. Thank you to Anthony Cabot and Jennifer Roberts for introducing our staff to each of the narrators—this special issue would not have been possible without you. Thank you to Dean Daniel W. Hamilton, Dean of the William S. Boyd School of Law, for his support and enthusiasm for this special issue and the Journal in general. Finally, a special thanks to the entire staff of the UNLV Gaming Law Journal for assisting with the interviews, editing, and publication of this special issue.
